

Richard Brautigan via S Cearley

Poem Sources:

"Geometry" from Lay the Marble Tea, San Francisco: Carp Press, 1959.

"The Buses" from Wild Dog (18), 17 July 1965

"Poem for Michael McClure" from The Poet's Eye: A Tribute to Lawrence Ferlinghetti and City Lights Books. Ed. Richard Ogar. Berkeley, CA: The Friends of the Bancroft Library, 1997.

"Death Like A Needle" from a broadside titled "Five Poems". Berkeley, California: Serendipity Books, 1971. Originally a broadside for the International Antiquarian Book Fair, New York City, Spring 1971. Later collected in Loading Mercury with a Pitchfork. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1976.

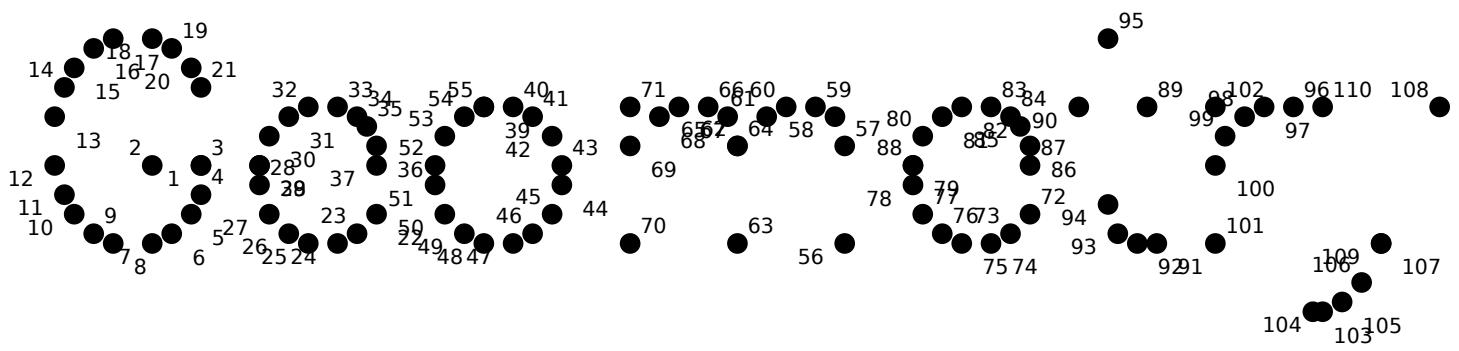

This collection is my attempt at something new in erasure poetry. Much of the poetry I work in lacks a tactile nature. Most erasure poetry requires that the poet truly gets into the work; touching it, feeling it. The reader, however, is not part of that.

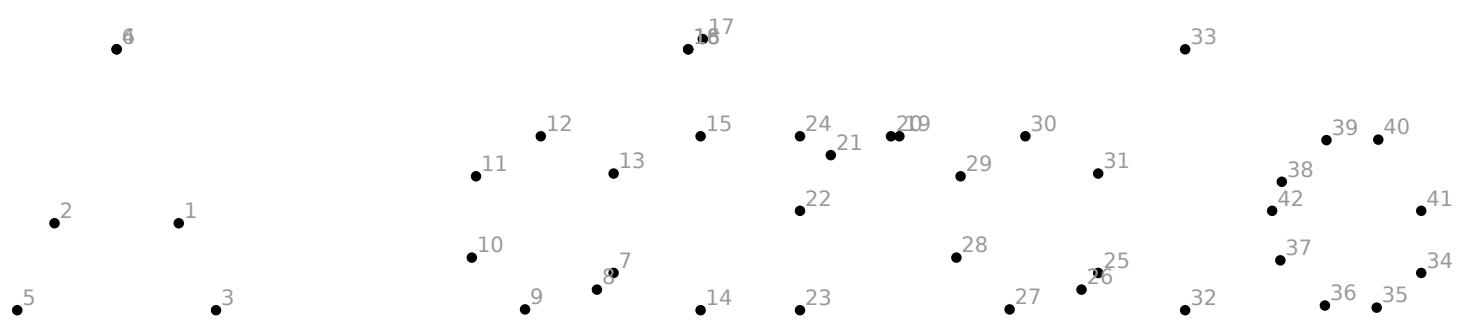

What I wanted to do was give the reader (if they wanted) something they can explore in creating much as the poet. Here the reader can view each poem as a peek of what is to come, connecting the dots so their own memories of connecting the dots, of running the pencil along the paper, of touching and marking and creating on the page, can be part of the exploration. Or, the reader can view the dot-to-dot as it is, no marking involved. Like an archaeologist finding the fragments of something that has almost disappeared, piecing together the phantasmic atoms. Richard Brautigan, in many ways a childlike poet, in many ways an anthropologist of ghosts, was an ideal source for this.

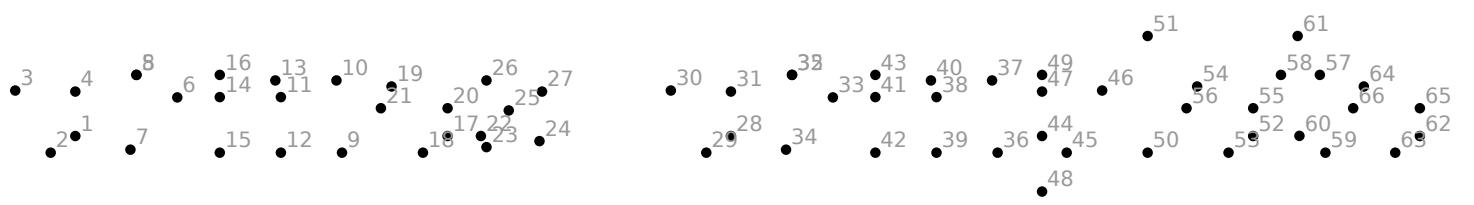

That's a fancy way of saying sometimes you want to bring back those pieces of childhood you forgot you'd lost, but enjoy in much different ways as an adult.

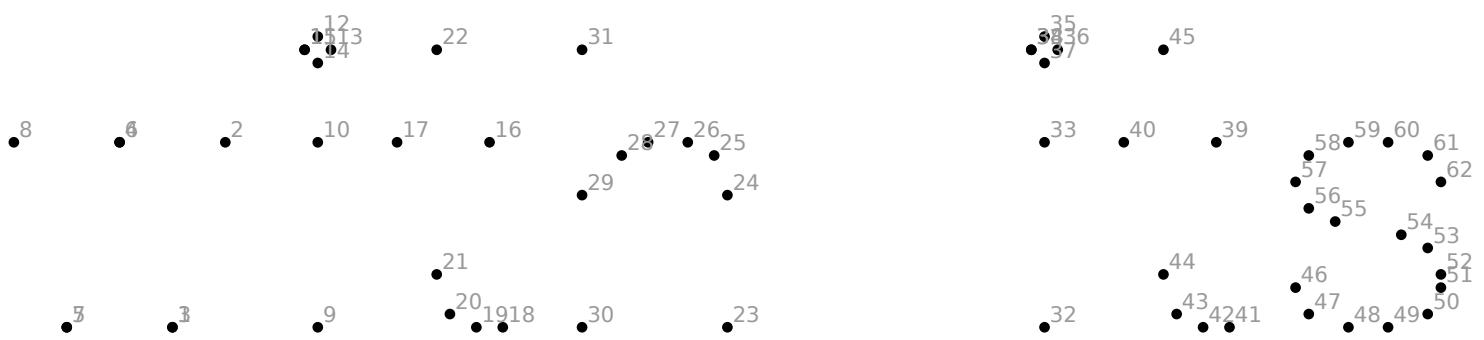

The technical aspect in this work required I learn more about Hershey fonts. These fonts were designed by Dr Allen Hershey in 1967 to render as vectors on early cathode ray displays. Currently these fonts are useful for plotters, cutters, and similar equipment.

S Cearley, Fourth Week of May, 2018

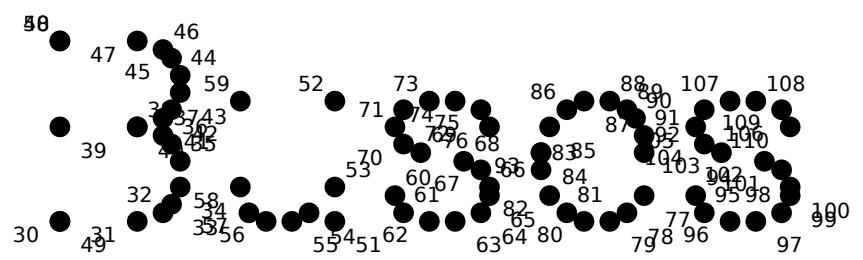

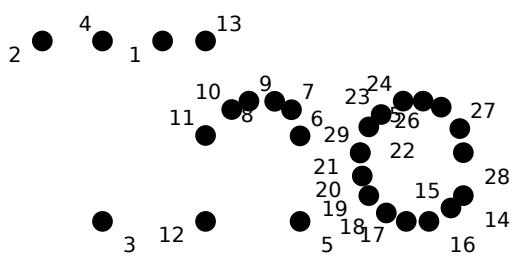

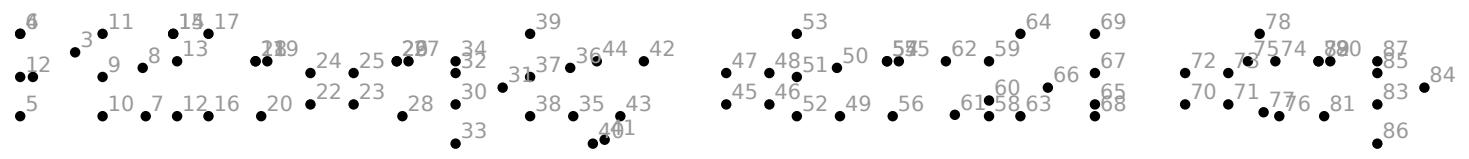

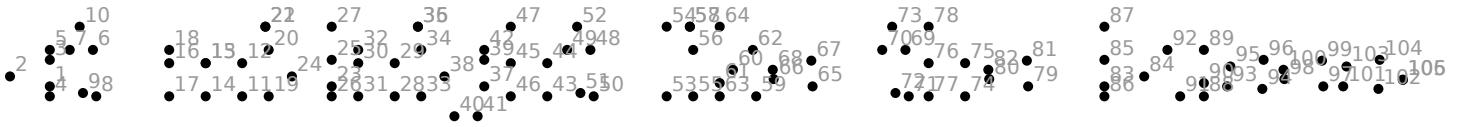

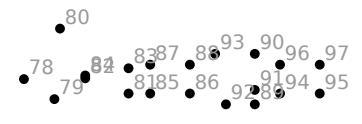

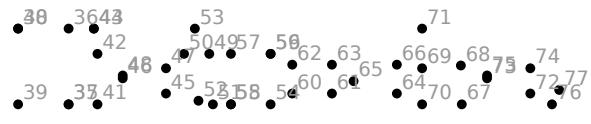

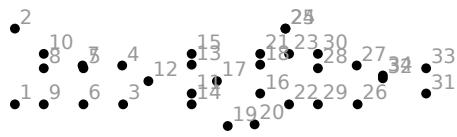

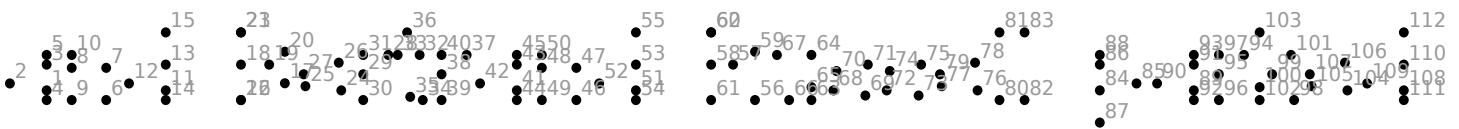

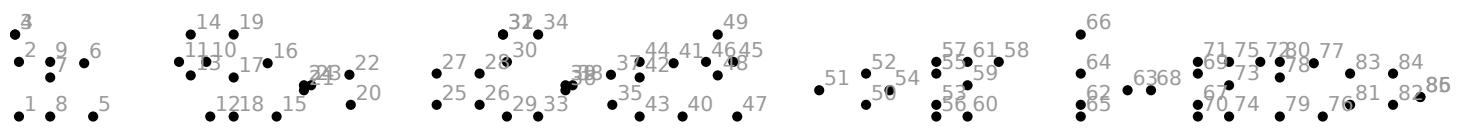

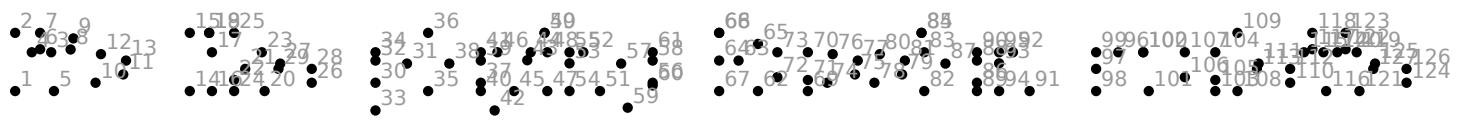

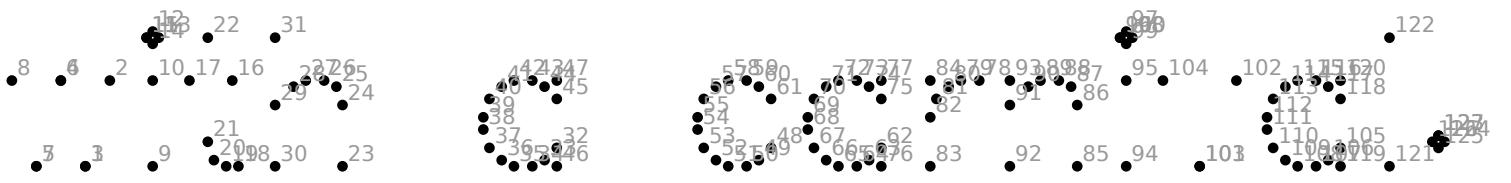

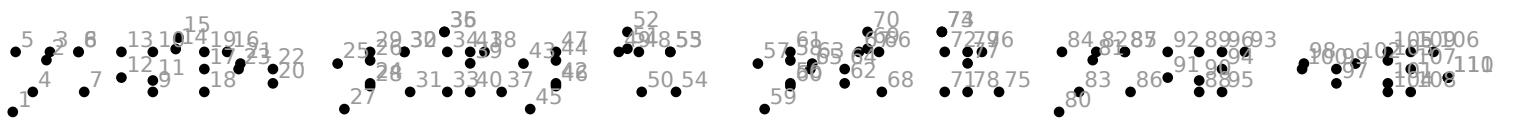

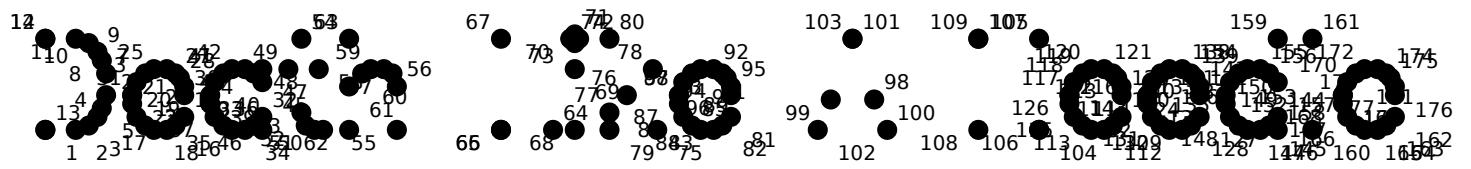

10 12 98
1 2145
2221 381961 3210 54 47
289 62 56 49 64
68 69 68 69 88 93
7 53 88 93
58 521 64
78 65 92 77
491 887
96 97 105 106 31 166
104 139 134 142 158 7 159
134 142 158 163
148 162
109 134 157 153 167 178
135 133 114 716 167 178
109 134 157 153 167 178
135 133 114 716 167 178
174 168 202 208 210
182 184 188 190 192 194
186 188 190 192 194
182 184 188 190 192 194
186 188 190 192 194
177 192 224 227 229 231
224 227 229 231 233 235
226 228 230 232 234 236

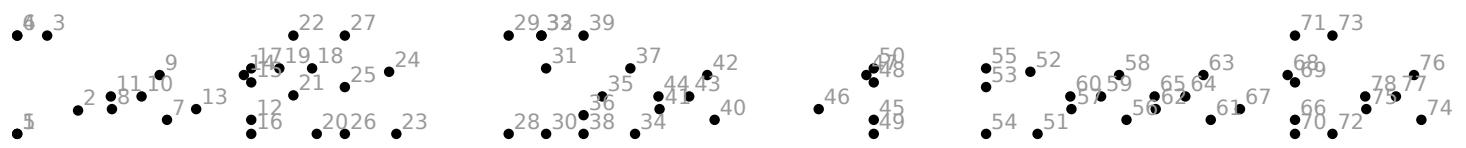

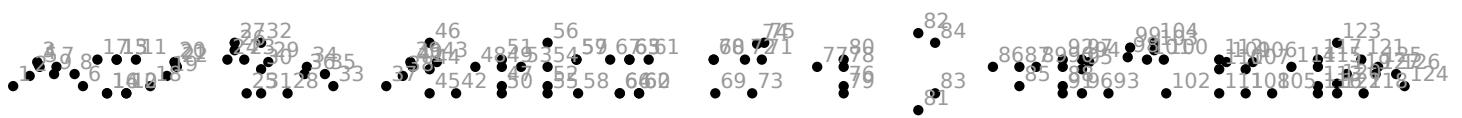

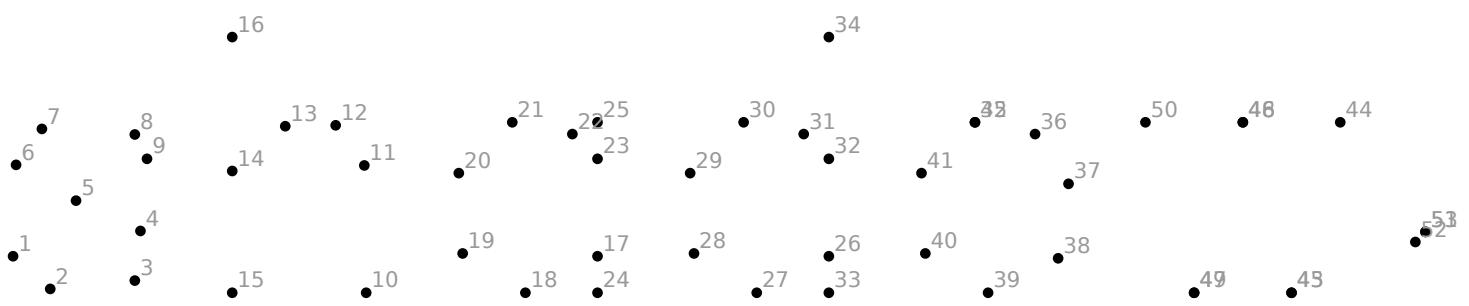

8 2 10 13 15 16 18 19
7 4 1 9 2 17 21
25 30 33 41 38 35
44 47 48
52 49 55 60 15 88 72 79 41 87 86
55 56 57 65 66 67 78 80 77
83 84 85 88 90 91 98 100 103 104 105
114 115 116 117 118 119 120 121 122 123 124 125 126 127 128 129 130 131 132 133 134 135 136 137

8 6 2 19 13 20
3 1 11 14 18 21
2 3 3 0 5
47 44 50 62 5 956
48 45 49 53 63 57
64 168 65 69
73 76 81 78 86 92 89
74 87 84 89 95 98 101 106
93 95 98 101 106
104 109
110 115 116
11B17 12 12 125 130 131 132
12 124 125 133

Copyrights, etc.

Clearly the poems as text are copyright whomever is responsible for Richard Brautigan's works these days. They may be scattered across different publishers, his daughter might have a claim. Ain't mine, but in the spirit of artistic/fair use, I reproduce them hazily, gauzily, nontransgressively.

Anything that could be considered my work is CC-BY-NC-SA. But naturally Richard gets first go.

